the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations 1994).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) has been instrumental in this regard, and has produced a series of reports on the state of the world's children (UNICEF 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994). These reports have highlighted the need for a new approach to children's rights, and have led to the adoption of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) in 1989.

The UNCRC is a landmark document in the history of children's rights. It is the first time that children have been recognized as subjects of rights, rather than objects of charity. The convention sets out a range of rights for children, including the right to life, the right to a name and nationality, the right to a family, the right to education, and the right to be heard.

The UNCRC has been ratified by over 100 countries, and is now the most widely ratified human rights treaty in the world. It is a testament to the growing awareness of the need to address the needs of children in the 1990s.

However, the UNCRC is not a magic wand. It is a framework for action, and it is up to individual countries to implement its provisions. In many cases, the implementation of the UNCRC has been slow and incomplete. This is particularly true in the case of children's rights to education and health care.

There is a need for a new approach to children's rights, one that is based on the principles of the UNCRC. This approach should be based on the following principles:

- 1. The best interests of the child should be the primary consideration in all actions concerning children.
- 2. Children have the right to be heard, and their views should be taken into account in all decisions that affect them.
- 3. Children have the right to a family, and the family is the basic unit of society.
- 4. Children have the right to education, and education is a fundamental right.
- 5. Children have the right to health care, and health care is a fundamental right.

These principles should guide the implementation of the UNCRC, and should be the basis for a new approach to children's rights in the 1990s.

In Spain, two primary taxes are associated with property purchases: IVA (Value Added Tax) and ITP (Property Transfer Tax). IVA, typically applicable to new constructions, stands at 10% of the property's value. On the other hand, ITP, levied on resale properties, varies between regions but generally ranges from 6% to 10%.
